

National Trust

Sutton Hoo Visitor Centre

Overview

Sutton Hoo is one of Britain's most important and atmospheric archaeological sites. The National Trust has opened a visitor centre that allows people to explore the Burial ground of the Anglo-Saxon kings of East Anglia and see the priceless royal treasures discovered in a huge ship grave.

The exhibition tells the compelling story of early English history, the Anglo Saxons through the objects discovered in the grave.

Working with Anglo Saxon re-enactment groups, replica wooden ship builders and craftsmen who replicate other Anglo Saxon crafts Newangle was asked to produce a 12 minute introductory programme that is shown in a viewing theatre to a seated audience. The programme provides insights into Anglo Saxon life, the story of the 1939 dig that discovered the burial ship and describes the significance of the discovered artefacts.

Project details

Client

National Trust

Designer

In-house

Services

Scriptwriting, purpose shot footage, archive research, copyright clearance, editing and sound design.

Overview

Projected film with a surround soundscape

